One FOSS maintainer lesson for your younger self 🤔

Do not get distracted by the bigger picture. Be opinionated. Be focused on small things. Welcome feedback but protect your project's vision.

Why do you do it? Why do you bother maintaining a FOSS project? What keeps you going?

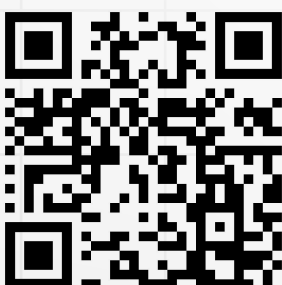

I like building things that last and make someone's day 10x smoother. It's art, it's engineering, and it's legacy — all tangled together.

Open source lets me:

- * Share my work without a gatekeeper, It helps me punch above my weight.
- * Learn from real-world feedback.
- * Build in public, with strangers who become friends
- * See code I wrote powering tools across the world

What makes me keep going ?

- * Github stars
- * Pride in the work
- * Curiosity to keep leveling up
- * Gratitude when someone contributes back
- * Stubbornness to not let the thing rot

Which file in your project would you most like to set on fire? 🔥

The release file. Something always breaks.

What's your open-source villain origin story? 🤩

I don't have one. My interactions with OSS community have been mostly nice. Someone becomes a villain when they don't acknowledge the efforts of others which inspired their current craft.
